

Clint Hood serves as the head of the multi-state Agriculture and Timber Division for Synovus Bank, bringing more than 37 years of experience in agriculture focused finance. He began his banking career in Macon, Georgia in 1988, following a formative chapter spent farming alongside his father in East Central Georgia. A proud graduate of the University of Georgia with a degree in Agricultural Economics, Clint transitioned into banking out of necessity—but found purpose in helping farm families navigate the challenges of agricultural finance.

Throughout his career, Clint has held executive leadership roles including President, CEO, and head of specialized banking groups across both community banks and regional institutions. His extensive background in agriculture—rooted in his upbringing on a row crop and livestock farm—continues to shape his perspective and approach to banking.

Today, Clint leads a dedicated team working with clients across the production agriculture, agribusiness, and forestry sectors. His division works daily with crops ranging from cotton, peanuts, and corn to poultry, cattle, and timber.

Based on a farm in Middle Georgia with his wife, Sherri, and youngest son, Jenner, Clint finds joy in passing on farm values to his six children and growing number of grandchildren. He remains deeply involved in agricultural organizations statewide, including leadership roles with the Georgia FFA Foundation, Georgia Bankers Association, Georgia Agribusiness Council, Georgia Farm Bureau, and the UGA Ag Alumni Association, among others.

Clint's legacy is one of service, resilience, and connection—anchored by his passion for agriculture and unwavering commitment to working with rural communities.
