

Spencer Knoll is the Director of U.S. Policy and Advocacy at Malaria No More. In this capacity, he leads the organization's engagement with Congress and federal agencies. Prior to joining the organization, he worked as an aide to a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and as an analyst focusing on the State and Foreign Operations appropriations bill. He is active in his community, where he serves on the Board of Associates of Hood College and chairs the Board of Directors of a Baltimore-based nonprofit that prepares college students for lives of public service. Spencer is a graduate of Hood College and the Georgetown University Walsh School of Foreign Service.
