

Muscogee (Creek) Nation
Principal Chief

James R. Floyd, FACHE

James Floyd is the chief executive of the fourth largest federally recognized tribe in the United States, located in Okmulgee, Oklahoma. Muscogee (Creek) Nation covers eleven counties in eastern Oklahoma with over 82,500 members worldwide. Floyd oversees departments of: Housing, Health (3 hospitals, 6 clinics) Social Services, Education, Training, Economic Development, Law Enforcement, Language, Tourism, Cultural, Historic Preservation, Media/Public Affairs, Community Development, Environmental, Veterans Services, Roads. Chief Floyd coordinates with traditional church and ceremonial ground leaders (Mekkos), Tribal communities, Tribal Legislative and Judicial branches, as well as with other tribal, city, state and federal governments.

Chief Floyd's career spans more than 35 years of public service: 28 years of federal service, 23 years in the Senior Executive Service. He served as Director of: the Eastern Oklahoma VA in Muskogee; the VA Heartland Network (VISN 15) in Kansas City, Missouri, where he oversaw nine hospitals and 47 clinics in six states with an annual budget of more than $2 billion and over 9,500 employees; the VA Salt Lake City Health Care System where he led the development of many innovative commercial businesses on federal property, including clinics, office buildings, a restaurant, and a credit union; the VA Hospital in Salt Lake City, Utah, where he coordinated federal health support for the 2002 Winter Olympic Games; and the Portland Area Indian Health Service in Portland, Oregon where he served as Area Director. In 2015 he was awarded the American College of Healthcare Executives' Regent's Award (lifetime achievement) for demonstrating "leadership ability...and innovative and creative management." Throughout his career with the Indian Health Service and the Department of Veterans Affairs, Mr. Floyd continued to serve Native Americans throughout the United States, while always keeping in mind how his efforts could benefit Muscogee (Creek) Nation. He has been recognized nationally for establishing outreach to Native American Veterans, incorporating traditional healing practices, and establishing tele-health services in rural and Native American communities.

Floyd began his professional career with Muscogee (Creek) Nation in Environmental Services. He was Manager of Health Services, then Director of Community Services where he implemented the Tribe's first food distribution, social services, burial assistance, and school clothing programs. Floyd managed the first Tribal-owned hospital in the US, and negotiated the transfer of the several clinics from IHS to Tribal management.

After graduating from Eufaula High School in 1970, Floyd earned an Associate Degree from Oklahoma State University. He graduated with honors with a Bachelor of Science in Health Care Administration from Northeastern State University, and earned a Masters of Public Administration/Health Administration from Portland State University. He completed training at the University of North Carolina and at the Brookings Institute. Floyd became a Fellow in the American College of Health Executives in 2009.

James has been married to Carol (Tustison) Floyd for 37 years. They have a son, Jacob, a daughter, Erin, and a son-in-law, Lloyd. He is Wind Clan, of Koweta Tribal Town; his Ceremonial Ground is Tvlhasse Wvkokaye.
