

Dr. Lisa Amaya-Jackson, MD, MPH, a child and adolescent psychiatrist, is Professor in Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences at Duke University Medical Center and Co-Director of the UCLA-Duke University National Center for Child Traumatic Stress, the coordinating center for the SAMHSA-funded National Child Traumatic Stress Network (NCTSN). She co-founded the Center for Child and Family Health in North Carolina, a tri-university community collaboration that like many centers in the NCTSN provides state-of-the-art trauma treatment and prevention services and a statewide training curriculum to serve community children exposed to traumatic life events. Dr. Amaya-Jackson has been in the field of child trauma for more than 35 years, and is now focused on the appropriate identification and effective dissemination/implementation of child trauma-informed, evidence-based interventions to create a national trauma-informed mental health workforce. She has published in numerous peer-reviewed journals and co-edited Enhancing Early Attachments: Theory, Research, Intervention, and Policy.
