

Liana Rosen is a Specialist in International Sanctions and Financial Crimes in the Foreign Affairs, Defense, and Trade Division at the Congressional Research Services (CRS). She advises Members of Congress as well as congressional committees and staff on U.S. sanctions policy and foreign policy responses to illicit finance and money laundering. Since 2007, Ms. Rosen has authored or co-authored numerous CRS products available on CRS.gov and Congress.gov, including reports on “Chinese Money Laundering Networks,” “U.S. Sanctions: Overview for the 119th Congress,” “The International Emergency Economic Powers Act: Origins, Evolution, and Use,” “The Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN): Anti-Money Laundering Act of 2020 Implementation and Beyond,” “The Foreign Terrorist Organization (FTO) List,” “Designating Cartels and Other Criminal Organizations as Foreign Terrorists: Recent Developments,” “Iran Conflict and the Strait of Hormuz: Impacts on Oil, Gas, and Other Commodities,” “Iran’s Petroleum Exports to China and U.S. Sanctions,” and “U.S. Cuba Policy: Recent Developments and the 119th Congress.” Previously, Ms. Rosen worked at the Brookings Institution on the intersection of fragile states and transnational security threats. As a Presidential Management Fellow, she served at the State Department’s Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs on anti-crime and anti-money laundering policy. She also participated in an anti-corruption Combined Joint Interagency Task Force based in Afghanistan. Ms. Rosen received a BA from Duke University and an MA from Georgetown University.