

Adam Levin, Analyst in Economic Development Policy, Congressional Research Service

Adam Levin is an analyst in economic development policy at the Congressional Research Service (CRS), where he has worked since April 2022. In his capacity at CRS, he provides Congress with confidential research and analysis on a range of programs and policies concerning economic development, including those related to small businesses, grants administration, disaster recovery, and the Defense Production Act. Prior to CRS, Levin worked at the Pew Charitable Trusts, where he conducted research and wrote reports on state and local government budgeting and finances. He holds a master's degree in city and regional planning from the University of North Carolina and an undergraduate degree from the University of Maryland.