

Carole House is a strategic technology executive who has spent her career focusing on leveraging innovative technologies to defend US national and economic security interests. She is a Senior Fellow at the Atlantic Council GeoEconomics Center and founder and CEO of a strategic technology and national security advisory practice, Penumbra Strategies. Carole also serves as a senior advisor to New Vista Capital, Member of the California Innovation Council, and a Distinguished Senior Fellow at the Association for Certified Anti-Money Laundering Specialists (ACAMS). Carole recently served as the White House National Security Council (NSC) as Special Advisor for Cybersecurity and Critical Infrastructure and Director for Cybersecurity and Secure Digital Innovation. During her time at the White House, Carole architected two Executive Orders driving critical steps to promote innovation in cybersecurity, digital identity, artificial intelligence, and digital assets. Carole has held positions in the private sector as an Executive in Residence at Terranet Ventures, Inc., co-founder and interim COO for a stealth fintech startup, and served on corporate and advisory boards for three financial regulatory agencies, three non-profits, and an AI and quantum security startup. She also has been recognized for her leadership in cyber and emerging tech initiatives, including the prestigious "Fed100" award and AFFIRM's "Leadership in Crisis" award, in addition to various publications across the Atlantic Council, Bloomberg, the Small Wars Journal, and the Military Review. Carole's prior government experience includes service as a U.S. Army Captain as well as positions leading emerging tech, cybersecurity, and national security initiatives across the White House, Senate Homeland Security Committee, and the U.S. Treasury Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN).