

Dr. Lauren Alexander Augustine is the Executive Director for the Gulf Research Program at the National Academies of Sciences Engineering and Medicine, where she oversees the management and use of the $500 million of Deepwater Horizon settlement funds entrusted to the National Academies by the Department of Justice. Prior to joining Gulf Research Program at the end of 2018, she served as Director of the Resilient America Program, and in a number of positions at the National Academies working on water, natural disasters, international programs, risk, and resilience. Dr. Augustine holds a BS in Applied Mathematics and Systems Engineering from the University of Virginia and a Ph.D. in environmental sciences from Harvard University.