

Laura Padin is the Director of Work Structures at the National Employment Law Project (NELP), an advocacy organization dedicated to making all jobs good jobs. Laura advocates for policies that improving working conditions for contingent workers, including temp workers and app-based or “gig” workers, as well as strong enforcement of existing labor standards. Laura has provided testimony on these issues before state legislatures and Congress and has been quoted in various news outlets. Prior to joining NELP in 2018, she was an attorney with the labor union coalition Change to Win, clerked for the Honorable Peter C. Dorsey in the District of Connecticut, and was a litigation associate with Cahill Gordon & Reindel LLP. Laura received her J.D. from NYU and her B.S. from Cornell’s School of Industrial and Labor Relations.