Updated 11/17/25

Deborah Figliola is a recently retired educator of 28 years. Her certifications are in special education, elementary education, reading/literacy education, and middle school English. Deborah has experience teaching at a special elementary school in New York City, a public high school on Long Island, New York, and a public middle school in Virginia. Mrs. Figliola, additionally, home schooled her three children.

Deborah has taught and tutored children with autism, attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD), and a variety of learning disabilities in reading, math and processing deficits. She has also worked with students with emotional disabilities and students exhibiting behavior issues requiring behavioral plans. Mrs. Figliola was regularly in general education classrooms either as a support for students with disabilities, as a co-teacher of English, or as a support for general education students within those classes.

Mrs. Figliola continues to provide private sessions for students with reading disabilities in her retirement.
