

Katherine Van Dyck is a seasoned attorney with over two decades of experience championing robust antitrust enforcement and consumer rights through strategic class action litigation and policy advocacy. Her work focuses on the importance of competition and how concentrated economic power leads to increased prices for consumers, depressed wages for the workforce, and the shuttering of small businesses. Ms. Van Dyck is a senior fellow with the American Economic Liberties Project and U.C. Berkeley School of Law's Civil Justice Research Initiative and the founder of KVD Strategies PLLC. During the Biden Administration, she served as an Attorney-Advisor in the Federal Trade Commission's Office of Policy Planning, where she expanded and ran the agency's amicus program. She is a graduate of Texas Christian University and the Texas Tech School of Law.
