

LINDA FLANAGAN is a freelance journalist, a former cross-country and track coach, and the author of Take Back the Game: How Money and Mania Are Ruining Kids' Sports—and Why It Matters. A graduate of Lehigh University, Flanagan holds master's degrees from Oxford University and the Fletcher School of Law & Diplomacy and was an analyst for the National Security Program at Harvard University. She is a founding board member of the New York City chapter of the Positive Coaching Alliance, a contributor to Project Play at the Aspen Institute, a member of the Health & Safety Advisory Council for the National Council on Youth Sports, and a regular writer for NPR's education site MindShift. Her columns on sports have appeared in The New York Times, The Wall St. Journal, The Atlantic, and Runner's World, and she is currently co-producing a documentary series on mental health in collegiate women athletes. A mother of three and a lifelong athlete, Flanagan lives in Summit with her husband, Bob, and a menagerie of pets.

Education:

Lehigh University, 1982-85

Oxford University, 1985-1987

Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tufts University, 1992-1994

Past Positions:

Case writer & National security analyst, Kennedy School of Govt @ Harvard 1987-1992

Freelance work:

- Co-created seminar course at MIT, the Sloan School, "business and national security" 2004-5
- Writer for the HELP Commission, a bipartisan commission designed to address foreign assistance, 2007/8
- Cross country and track coach at Oak Knoll school, 2002-2005
- Cross country and track coach at Kent Place School, 2005-2019