

Kari Lake

Kari Lake is an American political figure and former television news anchor, currently serving in the Trump Administration as Senior Advisor for the United States Agency for Global Media (USAGM). President Trump tasked Kari with overseeing, right-sizing and modernizing the taxpayer-funded agency.

Raised in Iowa as the youngest of nine children, Lake's midwestern warmth and friendliness served her well when she entered the Broadcast News profession fresh out of graduating from the University of Iowa. She spent 27 years covering news in Arizona, establishing a strong bond and earning trust with the people of her state. In 2021 she shocked everyone when she walked away from her lucrative television career as a top-rated, Emmy-award winning News Anchor because she refused to push false narratives and media lies about Covid, Elections and President Trump. Her public resignation resulted in an outpouring of Arizonan's calling for Kari to run for political office. She did and led a major MAGA-aligned movement. Dubbed "Trump in Heels" by corporate media, Kari became a voice of common-sense and a leader in the America First movement. Kari's two, back-to-back runs for Governor and US Senate, gained her national and international recognition and praise. Both elections were marred by a combination of election fraud, malfeasance, and chaos, sparking Lake to push for serious election reforms across the country and world. In 2023, Kari released a number-one, chart-topping song called "81-Million Votes My A" and that same year she wrote and published her best-selling book titled, Unafraid.

Kari is proud to be working in the Trump Administration along with a team from DOGE to streamline and force accountability and transparency at the US Agency for Global Media, which includes Voice of America, Radio Free Europe, Radio Free Asia, Middle East Broadcast Network and others.

Kari is a faithful Christian and an American patriot who is a devoted wife to her husband, Jeff, and a proud mother to her adult children, Ruby and Leo. She also has a pug named Coco.
