

Jennifer Quigley, President, U.S. Campaign for Burma

Jennifer Quigley has worked on the movement for freedom and human rights in Burma for more than fifteen years. She currently serves as the President of the U.S. Campaign for Burma, where she is working to ensure international policymakers support efforts to achieve peace and democracy, address human rights and humanitarian needs, and seek an end to crimes against humanity and impunity in Burma. Prior to joining the organization in 2007, she worked for the Women's League of Burma and its member organizations on international advocacy to end violence against women and promote the role of women in the peace-building process.
