

Dr Nitasha Kaul (PhD, MSc, BA Hons) is a multidisciplinary academic, novelist, public intellectual, media commentator, poet, and economist. Over the last two decades, she has researched and published extensively on themes relating to democracy, political economy, identity, feminist and postcolonial critiques, Bhutan, India, and Kashmir. Currently, she is an Associate Professor at the Centre for the Study of Democracy, University of Westminster in London, where she teaches postgraduate courses and supervises doctoral work in Politics and International Relations. She holds a joint doctorate in Economics and Philosophy (2003) and an MSc in Economics with a specialisation in Public Policy (1998) from the University of Hull. Her books include the monograph 'Imagining Economics Otherwise: encounters with identity/difference' (Routledge, 2007), and the Man Asian Literary Prize shortlisted novel 'Residue' (Rupa/Rainlight, 2014) about Kashmiris and the politics of identity across nation-state borders. She recently co-edited a special volume on 'Women and Kashmir', which is the first ever such collection to bring together work on Women and Kashmir by Kashmiri women scholars themselves. She has previously been an Associate Professor in Creative Writing in Bhutan and a tenured Assistant Professor in Economics at the Bristol Business School. She writes and speaks within and outside academia, see CV at www.nitashakaul.com and twitter @NitashaKaul
