

Erin Collinson
Director of Policy Outreach
Center for Global Development

Erin Collinson is Director of Policy Outreach at the Center for Global Development (CGD), a non-partisan think tank focused on international development and global economic policy issues. She is also a member of the steering committee of the Modernizing Foreign Assistance Network. For more than a decade, Collinson has followed US development policy, contributing regular analysis and commentary while closely tracking the journey from the Overseas Private Investment Corporation to the US International Development Finance Corporation and implementation of the Better Utilization of Investments Leading to Development (BUILD) Act. Before joining CGD, she spent over five years working for a member of senior leadership in the US Senate. Collinson holds a Master of Development Practice from the University of Minnesota and a BA from Denison University.