

Samuel Tadros is a Senior Fellow at the Hudson Institute's Center for Religious Freedom. He is a Contributor to the Hoover Institution's Herbert and Jane Dwight Working Group on Islamism and the International Order and was previously a Professorial Lecturer at the Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) at Johns Hopkins University. His current research focuses on Egyptian politics, Islamist movements, and the fate of religious minorities. He is the author of Motherland Lost: The Egyptian and Coptic Quest for Modernity and most recently Reflections on the Revolution in Egypt both published by Hoover Press. Motherland Lost is the receiver of the Bronze Medal in the best book written on the Middle East in 2013 competition organized by the Washington Institute for Near East Policy.

Before joining Hudson in 2011, Tadros was a Senior Partner at the Egyptian Union of Liberal Youth, an organization that aims to spread the ideas of classical liberalism in Egypt. Born and raised in Egypt, he received an M.A. in Democracy and Governance from Georgetown University and a B.A. in Political Science from the American University in Cairo. He has studied at the Coptic Theological Seminary in Cairo. In 2007 he was chosen by the State Department for its first Leaders for Democracy Fellowship Program in collaboration with Syracuse University's Maxwell School.

Mr. Tadros' articles have been published by the Wall Street Journal, Foreign Policy, National Review, Current Trends, World Affairs, and The Weekly Standard. He has frequently appeared on a variety of TV channels including Fox News, CNN, Sky News, Al Hurra, Al Jazeera, and WSJ Opinion.