

Alexis Arieff is a Specialist in African Affairs at the Congressional Research Service, where she supports Members of Congress and their staff with independent, nonpartisan policy analysis on North, West, and Central Africa. Alexis has been detailed to policy offices at the State Department (in 2015) and Defense Department (in 2010), and served as an international election observer in Tunisia (2019, 2014, and 2011) and Guinea (2010). She was a Fulbright scholar in Conakry, Guinea, in 2008-09. Before joining CRS 12 years ago, Alexis worked as a researcher on Africa for the Committee to Protect Journalists, and completed shorter stints as a research fellow in the International Crisis Group's West Africa field office and as a contributing writer for Freedom House. She has an MA in international relations from Yale University and a BA from Brown University.