

Biography – Allison Minor

Allison Minor is the director of the Atlantic Council's Project for Middle East Integration. Minor came to the Atlantic Council after a career in the US government, where she served as deputy special envoy for Yemen and as director for Arabian Peninsula affairs at the National Security Council. In these roles, Minor helped negotiate peace agreements, navigate periods of extreme instability, and deepen US partnerships across the Arab Gulf.

As managing director at the US Development Finance Corporation and in multiple senior roles at the US Agency for International Development, Minor championed creative approaches to leveraging economic tools to promote peace and stability in the Middle East and beyond.

Minor has produced action-oriented research on complex policy challenges, including as a fellow at the Brookings Institution. Her work has been published in Foreign Affairs, Foreign Policy, and other leading foreign policy publications.