He went on to study Politics, Philosophy and Economics at Queen's University Belfast, graduating in 2017. From Monday to Friday, Michael works in a software firm in central Belfast that specialises in the management of data, however, by weekends; he enjoys reciting an array of facts and dates in his role as a Titanic tour guide. Having worked in tourism in Belfast over the past ten years, he has been delighted to see the new found growth and prosperity that's emerged in Northern Ireland. This inspired him to try and play his part in making the place we live - and love - a better one. He believes that integrated education is central to developing a society that is truly reconciled.*
