

Alissa S. Wilson is Public Education and Advocacy Coordinator for Africa at the American Friends Service Committee (AFSC), where she brings the lessons learned from AFSC's work in Africa to the Washington DC policy community and liaises with the Quaker United Nations Office. Alissa currently sits on the board of the Alliance for Peacebuilding and the executive committee of the Charity and Security Network. Before Alissa's current position, she spent two years with the National Democratic Institute (NDI), in South Sudan, where she created and managed a community organizing program implemented in all 10 states. Alissa has also served as the AFSC Policy Associate for Peace and Security, Researcher in Ethics and Human Development at Tufts University / Affiliate at the Global Equity Initiative at Harvard University, Jane Addams–Andrew Carnegie Fellow at the Center on Philanthropy at IU and an AmeriCorps member. Alissa is co-author of Practical Idealists: Changing the World and Getting Paid. She holds a BA from Amherst College in Political Science and a MALD from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University.