

Peter Gallo joined the U.N. in March 2011. He was employed as an investigator in the Investigations Division of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS). Prior to joining the UN he spent 18 years as an investigator in the private sector in Asia, where he was recognized as an authority on money laundering.

Mr. Gallo is admitted to practice law in his home country of Scotland, in Hong Kong where he lived for many years, and in New York. He has an MBA and a Master's degree in International Criminal Law. He has had a number of articles published on money laundering and investigation management, has spoken at numerous conferences, and taught courses in these subjects as an adjunct lecturer in Hong Kong.
