Meghan Armistead is currently the Senior Research and Policy Advisor at Catholic Relief Services (CRS), focused on identifying, analyzing, and translating evidence for improved humanitarian and development policy. Her portfolio focusses on local leadership, localization, civil society and aid reform. Previously, Meghan was a Senior Technical Advisor in the Program Quality and Impact team at CRS, working with partner agencies around the world and fostering local leadership. Over the past 20 years, Meghan has worked with community, faith-based, and national organizations to strengthen partnerships, to assess and strengthen organizational capacities, and to identify and scale civil society innovation and leadership. She has been an NGO Development Volunteer with the Peace Corps in Haiti and worked for Lutheran World Relief (LWR), as a technical advisor in East and West Africa, as well as serving at LWR headquarters focused on global program quality and innovation. She has a BA in History from Tufts University and an MA in International Development and Economics from the Johns Hopkins School for Advanced International Studies (SAIS).