

Jamila Michener, PhD is a professor in the department of Government and Brooks School of Public Policy at Cornell University. She is co-director of the Cornell Center for Health Equity, Associate Dean of Public Engagement at the Brooks School of Public Policy and Board Chair of the Cornell Prison Education Program. She is author of Fragmented Democracy: Medicaid, Federalism and Unequal Politics (Cambridge University Press). This book examines the political consequences of Medicaid's geographic policy disparities, demonstrating how such inequities affect democratic citizenship. Unpacking how federalism transforms Medicaid beneficiaries' interpretations of government and structures their participation in politics, Fragmented Democracy assesses American political life from the vantage point(s) of those who are living in or near poverty, (disproportionately) Black or Latino, and reliant on a federated government for vital resources.

Michener's research has been supported by the Institute for Research on Poverty, the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, the Russell Sage Foundation, the National Science Foundation, the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the Commonwealth Fund, and the Ford Foundation. Her public writing has been featured in the New York Times, the Washington Post, Vox, and many other outlets. Prior to working at Cornell, she was a Robert Wood Johnson Health Policy Scholar at the University of Michigan. She received her MA and PhD from the University of Chicago and her undergraduate degree from Princeton University.
