

Natalie Wilson

Co-Founder and Chief Operating Officer

Natalie Wilson is the co-founder and chief operating officer of the Black and Missing Foundation, Inc (BAMFI). With more than a decade years' experience in public relations, Natalie is involved in all aspects of BAMFI's operations, including the development and execution of strategic outreach and PR to ensure coverage of the foundation's mission and initiatives.

Natalie knows the power and reach of media coverage as highlighted in the HBO docuseries, "Black and Missing." She has garnered local, national and international media placements with platforms, such as the Associated Press, CNN, Essence, Fox 5 DC, Huffington Post, NPR, Oxygen.com, People, The View, Oprah Daily, New York Times, and the Washington Post, which continue to keep the issue of missing and exploited persons of color in the forefront.

Natalie is a L'Oréal Paris 2021 Women of Worth honoree as well as a Black Girls Rock 2017 "Community Change Agent" awardee.

She holds a Master of Arts in communications from Trinity University and a Bachelor of Arts in psychology from Howard University.

She resides in Washington, DC with her family.