

Alex Bosco Biography

Alex Bosco, born in Milan Italy, immigrated to the United States in 1973 where his family settled in Oldwick, New Jersey. His father put himself through dental school while his mother dedicated 35 years to education, serving as a high school language teacher. The child of hard working immigrant parents, Alex was able to pursue the American dream.

After Graduating from Rutgers University with a BA in languages having focused on Italian, French, Spanish, and German, Alex felt compelled to give back to the country that gave his family endless opportunity. He became a member of the United States Marine Corps and served as a Field Radio Operator in an artillery unit. Later in life, although no longer serving in the Marine Corps, the events of 9/11 compelled Alex to enlist in the Army to fight in the war against terrorism. While in the Army, Alex served with the Southern European Task Force's Augmentation unit under the command of the 173rd Airborne and AFRICOM as an Armorer. He was in charge of maintaining the weapons of an Airborne Infantry Unit and played a crucial role in assisting with the run-up and deployment of the 173rd Airborne into northern Iraq. Furthermore, The United States Army utilized his language skills by placing him as a liaison between the Italian Carabinieri and US forces.

Following his honorable discharge from the Military, Alex utilized his experience of serving in both the Marine Corps and the Army by becoming the co-founder of SB Tactical, a manufacturing company that produces parts and accessories for the PDW pistol platforms. Now a resident of St. Petersburg Florida, Alex is a proud father of two, ages 11 and 13, and a husband to an Italian immigrant who, like his family before him, received her U.S citizenship to pursue the American dream.
