

Joseph Siegle Biography

Dr. Joseph Siegle is the Director of Research at the Africa Center for Strategic Studies, an independent academic center established by the Department of Defense to advance understanding of Africa's security challenges. His areas of expertise include strategic competition, the stabilization of fragile states, democratic accountability, and the political economy of democratic transitions. Dr. Siegle's writings have been published in leading journals and newspapers, including over a dozen articles on the geostrategic, security, and governance implications of Russia's expanding influence in Africa.

Dr. Siegle draws on experience as a practitioner, scholar, and policy analyst. He was previously the Douglas Dillon Fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations, a senior research scholar at the University of Maryland's Center for International and Security Studies (CISSM), and a senior advisor for democratic governance at DAI. For more than a decade, he served in various field capacities throughout Africa as well as in Asia and the Balkans with the international NGO, World Vision, and as a U.S. Peace Corps Volunteer.

Dr. Siegle holds a doctorate in international security and economic policy from the University of Maryland's School of Public Policy and a master's in agricultural economics, with an emphasis on African food security, from Michigan State University.
