

Lt. General David W. Barno, USA (Ret.) is a Visiting Professor of Strategic Studies and a Senior Fellow of the Merrill Center at the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) in Washington, D.C. He is also a Contributing Editor and Columnist for War on the Rocks, and an Adjunct Research Staff Member at the Institute for Defense Analyses. A highly decorated military officer with over 30 years of service, he has held a variety of command and staff positions in the United States and around the world, to include command at every level. General Barno served many of his early years in special operations forces with Army Ranger battalions, to include combat in both the Grenada and Panama invasions. From 2003 to 2005, he was the overall commander of U.S. and coalition forces in Afghanistan.

Prior to his current position at SAIS, General Barno was a Distinguished Practitioner in Residence at American University's School of International Service, following five years as a Senior Fellow and Senior Advisor at the Center for a New American Security, a non-partisan national security think tank. From 2006 to 2010, General Barno served as the Director of the Near East South Asia Center for Strategic Studies at the National Defense University, and travelled widely across the region. During part of this time, he also supported three different Secretaries of Veterans Affairs as the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom Veterans and Families. General Barno is widely published and has testified before Congress numerous times. He co-authored the recent book Adaptation Under Fire: How Militaries Change in Wartime with Dr. Nora Bensahel.

General Barno is a native of Endicott, New York and was commissioned as an Infantry Officer from the United States Military Academy at West Point in 1976 with a Bachelor of Science degree. He holds a Master of Arts in National Security Studies from Georgetown University and is a graduate of the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and the U.S. Army War College. He is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and the International Institute of Strategic Studies.