Laura Chadwick is President & CEO of the Travel Tech Association. Chadwick brings more than fifteen years of trade association leadership in government affairs and membership to her work at Travel Tech. Previously, Chadwick served as the XR Association's (XRA) Vice President of Industry Relations. She launched the new organization's membership, marketing, and development efforts. Under Chadwick's leadership, XRA grew from five members to more than 40. She was also a Director of Corporate Member Engagement at the National Restaurant Association and a federal lobbyist specializing in technology and innovation policy within its Government Affairs department. Before the National Restaurant Association, Chadwick worked at the Consumer Technology Association where she advocated for pro-innovation public policy.

Chadwick graduated from Washington & Lee University with a Bachelor's in Politics and holds a Master of Public Administration degree from American University's School of Public Affairs. She lives in Arlington, Virginia with her twin sons and dog.
