

Sarah Parshall Perry

Sarah Parshall Perry is a Senior Legal Fellow in the Edwin Meese III Center for Legal and Judicial Studies at The Heritage Foundation where she focuses on civil rights, constitutional governance, regulatory policy, and the proper role of the courts.

She is former Senior Counsel to the Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights at the U.S. Department of Education where she focused on policy reform, technical guidance, and the Department's annual report to Congress. While at OCR, she co-chaired the Employment Engagement, Diversity, & Inclusion Council.

Sarah is also the former senior fellow for education reform at the Family Research Council and has written widely on the fight against the industrialized education complex. Her work at the Family Research Council also included the building and oversight of national policy coalitions geared toward the fight against antisemitism in academia and protecting religious liberty within the service branches.

Prior to that, she served as In-House Counsel and Development Director at a multi-million-dollar advertising agency and began her legal career as an associate in the field of complex civil litigation, focusing on maritime/admiralty, False Claims Act, and Title VII employment discrimination law.

Sarah also acted as the regular stand-in host on "Washington Watch," a nationally syndicated current events radio program heard on more than 400 stations nationwide, and has appeared in both national and international media outlets, including the Associated Press, BBC World News, BBC radio, Alhurra, Fox News, The Washington Times, NPR, and The New York Times, among others.

Sarah has a law degree from the University of Virginia School of Law, where she was a recipient of the American Jurisprudence award, a Phi Delta Phi honor society member, and a student practitioner before the 4th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals. She holds a bachelor's degree in Journalism with honors from Liberty University.

Sarah is the mother of three teenage athletes and the author of three books on the trials and triumphs of parenting children on the autism spectrum.