

Dan Lips

Dan Lips is head of policy at the Foundation for American Innovation, an organization focused on developing technology, talent, and ideas that support a better, freer and more abundant future. Lips's research focuses on improving governance, addressing national security risks, and promoting innovation. He is also a senior fellow with the Foundation for Research on Equal Opportunity and a fellow with the National Security Institute at the George Mason University's Antonin Scalia Law School.

Previously, Lips served as policy director of the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee. Lips has also served with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, where he focused on cybersecurity intelligence, and worked at federal and state think tanks, where he studied education policy.

He earned his bachelor's degree in Politics from Princeton University and his master's degree in Statecraft and National Security Affairs from the Institute of World Politics.