Bio
March 13, 2024

Matt Glassman is a Senior Fellow at the Government Affairs Institute at Georgetown University, where he teaches, researches, writes, and advises about Congress, federalism, separation of powers, and American politics.

Prior to joining GAI, Matt spent 10 years on Capitol Hill at the Congressional Research Service. His portfolio at CRS included institutional issues for the legislature: procedure and operations, budget and appropriation process, nominations, oversight, and separation of powers. While at CRS, Matt spent two fiscal years on loan to the House Committee on Appropriations, where he worked on the Legislative Branch subcommittee, writing funding bills and conducting oversight of the appropriations for the House, Senate, and legislative branch agencies.

Matt is currently a member of the Planning Commission in Vienna, Virginia, where he lives with his wife Sarah and their three daughters.

Matt has a B.A. from Hamilton College, and a Ph.D. in political science from Yale University.
