

Cynthia Kaiser is an award-winning cyber and national security executive with more than two decades of experience leading strategy and intelligence efforts against sophisticated adversaries targeting government, critical infrastructure, and the private sector.

As former Deputy Assistant Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Cyber Division, she led national cyber strategy integration, intelligence-driven disruption operations, and public-private partnerships to counter ransomware and nation-state threats. During her FBI tenure, she delivered daily intelligence briefings to senior White House officials under two administrations and served on the Cyber Safety Review Board, contributing to systemic risk analysis and national resilience recommendations.

Today, Cynthia serves as SVP of the Halcyon Ransomware Research Center, advancing actionable threat intelligence and cross-sector collaboration to help organizations anticipate, contain, and recover from cyber disruption affecting critical infrastructure and global enterprises.

A nationally recognized cyber expert, Cynthia provides analysis on cyber risk, geopolitical dynamics, and technology policy across major U.S. and international media. She has appeared on broadcast networks including ABC News, Fox News, Bloomberg, BBC, and CBS, and her expertise is frequently featured in leading publications such as The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, and CNN.

Cynthia brings deep expertise in cyber risk governance, crisis leadership, regulatory dynamics, and public-private coordination, advising organizations on strengthening oversight, preparedness, and resilience in an era of persistent cyber conflict. She serves on cyber- and energy-focused advisory boards and works closely with government and industry leaders to strengthen cyber resilience across critical infrastructure, global enterprises, and public institutions.
