

DIANA FURCHTGOTT-ROTH

Diana Furchtgott-Roth, an Oxford-educated economist, directs the Center for Energy, Climate, and Environment at the Heritage Foundation and is an adjunct professor of economics at George Washington University. Diana served as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Research and Technology at the U.S. Department of Transportation, where she directed the Department's $1.2 billion research budget; the Office of Positioning, Navigation and Timing (PNT) and Spectrum Management; the Volpe National Transportation Systems Center; and the University Transportation Center program. Diana also worked in senior roles in the White House under Presidents Reagan, George H.W. Bush, and George W. Bush, where she was Chief of Staff of the Council of Economic Advisers. She is the author or coauthor of six books and hundreds of articles, most recently United States Income, Wealth, Consumption, and Inequality (Oxford University Press, 2021). She is a frequent guest on TV and radio shows and a columnist for Forbes.