

Travis Tygart

Travis T. Tygart has been the CEO of USADA since September 2007, following 22 years with the organization in roles including Director of Legal Affairs and Senior Managing Director & General Counsel. Tygart has been instrumental in anti-doping efforts, drafting the USADA Protocol for Olympic Movement Testing and leading high-profile investigations such as the BALCO case and the Lance Armstrong doping scandal. Under his leadership, USADA has championed global anti-doping reform and advocated for athlete rights. Tygart has testified before numerous national and international committees and has been recognized for his contributions to clean sport. He holds a BA in philosophy from UNC Chapel Hill and a JD from Southern Methodist University, and lives with his wife, Nichole, and their three children.