National Chicken Council

Senior Vice President

William (Bill) P. Roenigk is Senior Vice President of the National Chicken Council, the U.S. organization representing companies that produce, process and market over 95 percent of the young meat chickens (broilers) in the United States. His responsibilities at the Council have included conducting economic and market analyses and presentation of broiler industry issues and concerns, both domestic and international to a variety of government bodies and non-government organizations. Additionally, he oversees projects that involve industry and consumer market surveys. Information from these surveys provides important insights and understandings in addressing marketing, regulatory, and legislative issues. He has served on the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Foreign Agricultural Service's Technical Advisory Committee for Trade in Animals and Animal Products since the mid-'70s when the Trade Advisory Committees were established by Congress and also when he joined the National Broiler Council (the previous name of the National Chicken Council). Prior to his present position of Senior Vice President, he was Director of Economic Research and Membership Services for the National Broiler Council.

Before joining the Council, Bill was Agricultural Economist with the federal government's Office of Food/Cost-of-Living Council; Agricultural Economist with the Foreign Regional Analysis Division/Economic Research Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture; and Agricultural Economist with the Dairy, Livestock and Poultry Division/Foreign Agricultural Service, USDA. Degrees include Bachelor of Science from The Pennsylvania State University and Master of Science from the University of Delaware. Both degrees are in agricultural economics. He has completed the course work in agricultural economics for a Doctorate degree in Agricultural Economics at the University of Maryland.
