

Harry Krejsa

Director of Studies, Carnegie Mellon Institute for Strategy & Technology

Harry Krejsa is the Director of Studies at the Carnegie Mellon Institute for Strategy & Technology in Washington, D.C.

Harry joined Carnegie Mellon from the White House's Office of the National Cyber Director where he oversaw cyber and technology strategy for domestic and international policy. While there Harry directed the development and rollout of the 2023 National Cybersecurity Strategy, led the establishment of advanced energy security priorities, and represented the U.S. government in consultations with foreign partners and the global private sector.

Prior to joining the White House, Harry oversaw strategy and U.S.-China competition for the Department of Defense's cyber policy office, including the 2018 DoD Cyber Strategy and inaugural Cyber Posture Review. He developed initial military guidance for new offensive authorities to deter and disrupt adversary cyber campaigns, and negotiated "Hunt Forward" joint operations with foreign militaries to root out malware on strategic systems. Upon leaving DoD Harry was awarded the Office of the Secretary of Defense Medal for Exceptional Public Service.

Harry also served as Director of the Integration Cell at the U.S. Cyberspace Solarium Commission, where he led research on emerging technology trends and their implications for U.S. government policy. He oversaw the Commission's strategy and policy development on norms and values in technology design, artificial intelligence, election cybersecurity, and China's influence over strategic technologies. Before joining government, Harry was a fellow at the Center for a New American Security where he researched U.S.-China economic and technology competition, broader Indo-Pacific security strategy, and the interaction of foreign policy with economic trends in the United States.

Harry, hailing from rural Iowa, holds a master's degree in International Relations from the Princeton University School of Public and International Affairs and a B.A. in Political Science and East Asian Studies from Grinnell College. Harry also studied at Nanjing University in China and completed a Fulbright Fellowship in Taiwan.