

Allan Coukell

Senior Director, Drugs and Medical Devices
The Pew Charitable Trusts

Allan Coukell, BScPharm, is senior director of drugs and medical devices at the Pew Charitable Trusts, an independent nonprofit research and public policy organization, where he oversees initiatives related to drug and medical device innovation and safety, medical conflicts-of-interest, the pharmaceutical supply chain and FDA. Prior to joining Pew, he practiced as a clinical pharmacist in oncology at the London Health Sciences Center and Ontario Regional Cancer Center; served as a senior medical writer and editor with the medical journal publisher Adis International; and covered health and science as a reporter and producer for WBUR (NPR) in Boston and Radio New Zealand. He serves on the boards of the Medical Device Innovation Consortium and the Reagan Udall Foundation and was previously the consumer representative on the FDA's Cardiovascular and Renal Drugs Advisory Committee.