International Academy of Compounding Pharmacists

David G. Miller, R.Ph. is Executive Vice President and Chief Executive Officer of the International Academy of Compounding Pharmacists. IACP represents more than 2,100 practitioners and 163,000 consumers who recognize the value of customized medication solutions provided by the art and science of pharmacy – compounding.

After receiving his bachelor of science in pharmacy degree from the University of Maryland School of Pharmacy in 1985, he joined the staff of the National Community Pharmacists Association (formerly NARD) as Director of Professional Affairs. In 1988, he accepted a position as Director of Professional Affairs for the Maryland Pharmacists Association and was promoted to serve as that organization's Executive Director three years later.

Miller left the pharmacy association world in 1996 to become the Director of Pharmacy Affairs at Merck where he was responsible for corporate relations with the profession at the national and state level as well as with the academic community. During his tenure at Merck, he supported and participated in large scale demonstration projects that documented the value of pharmacists in improving adherence and compliance, developed innovative approaches for continuing education programs, and championed the public health role of pharmacists as immunizers and patient educators.

In 2010, he took over as CEO for IACP as it began its twentieth year. A passionate advocate for pharmacy, he has received numerous awards from national and state associations, served on committees and in advisory positions for the American Pharmacists Association (APhA), National Community Pharmacists Association (NCPA), National Association of Chain Drug Stores (NACDS), National Alliance of State Pharmacy Associations (NASPA), and many others. Miller lectures frequently on leadership development, strategic planning for organizations, and on advancing the profession of pharmacy.
