

Patricia Riley, MS

Commissioner
Executive Director
National Academy for State Health Policy

Patricia Riley has served on the Medicaid and CHIP Payment and Access Commission since its establishment in 2010. She is also executive director of the National Academy for State Health Policy. Previously, she was a senior fellow of health policy and management at the Muskie School of Public Service, University of Southern Maine. Following her tenure as director of the Maine Governor's Office of Health Policy and Finance, she was the first distinguished visiting fellow in state health policy at The George Washington University, where she serves as a lecturer. She was a principal architect of the Dirigo Health Reform Act of 2003, which was enacted to increase access, reduce costs, and improve quality of health care in Maine. Under four Maine governors, she held appointed positions, including executive director of the Maine Committee on Aging, director of the Bureau of Maine's Elderly, associate deputy commissioner of health and medical services, and director of the Bureau of Medical Services, which is responsible for the Medicaid program and health planning and licensure. Ms. Riley served on Maine's Commission on Children's Health, which planned the state's CHIP. She is a member of the Kaiser Commission on Medicaid and the Uninsured and has served as a member of the Institute of Medicine's Subcommittee on Creating an External Environment for Quality and its Subcommittee on Maximizing the Value of Health. Ms. Riley also has served as a member of the board of directors of the National Committee for Quality Assurance. She received her master of science in community development from the University of Maine.
