Multi-Site, Palliative Care Research Network to Reinvigorate Biomedical Research in Palliative Medicine
This project will aim to cultivate new collaborations among established investigators, and to assemble a new multidisciplinary team, to facilitate the conduct of innovative, high-impact, clinically relevant research in one of the most challenging biomedical and behavioral areas – palliative care. While developing policies and procedures for inter-institutional, collaborative research, this project will also test the collaborative network and refine its methods through the design and conduct of a specific study addressing

Current Grants:

1. Kornfeld Foundation
Morrison (PI)
1/1/97-12/31/12, renewed 1/1/13-12/30/18
National Palliative Care Research Center
The Research Center will provide a mechanism to encourage and support regular scientific interchange and networking, initiate and coordinate multi-site studies, develop and fund junior investigators, and finance pilot studies that can lead to larger NIH funded research. The Center will focus on promoting research in 3 key areas: pain and symptom management, health services research - specifically the evaluation of models of care for palliative care delivery, and improving communication between providers and patients through rigorously designed clinical studies.

Promoting Independence Through Pain and Symptom Management
Substantial data suggest that the care of older adults living with serious illness is in need of improvement. The proposed OAIC would establish a sustainable infrastructure to support the development of new investigators in geriatric palliative care research, support research in geriatric palliative care, and develop or adapt instruments, designs, and analytic methods necessary to improve care for seriously ill older adults.

The Impact of Hospice Preferred Practices on Patient Outcomes in Hospice Costs
The goals of this grant are to build the evidence base for hospice preferred practices by assessing their association with patient outcomes and hospice costs. Such information may guide national recommendations on best practices and will inform regulatory and professional interventions to monitor and promote higher quality more cost effective care at the end of life in the hospice setting.

Enhancing Research Capacity in Geriatric Palliative Care

The main goals of this project are to enhance our efforts to stimulate research for seriously ill older adults by creating a research technical assistance program for early-stage investigators through the NPCRC research network and catalyze the development of research networks and multi-site studies in geriatric palliative care by supporting pilot/exploratory projects and the development of research collaborative for experienced investigators.

The major goal of this project is to update the 2011 State-by-State Report Card on Access to Palliative Care in Our Nation's Hospitals with the most recent data on palliative care. Findings will be translated into clinical practice, public awareness, and policy recommendations to promote the palliative care field.
