Chief of Police Frank L. Fowler

Chief Frank L. Fowler was appointed Syracuse Police Chief in 2009 and currently leads the largest law enforcement agency in Central New York. As Chief, he continually provides executive leadership to the Syracuse Police Department and the City of Syracuse community utilizing the professional tools of organizational values, vision, mission, strategic planning, and exemplary ethical standards to advance the department's service and components' status in the community.

Chief Fowler persistently seeks creative and innovative solutions to various problems and challenges to best fulfill his duties and responsibilities as a law enforcement executive. Under his leadership, the Syracuse Police Department has continued to make significant progress in driving down violent crime in the City of Syracuse. He always strives to improve the administrative and technical practices within the Syracuse Police department to assure the highest integrity within the department and to enhance trust of the public.

Chief Fowler has long been at the forefront of developing innovative policing strategies, community-based initiatives, organizational accountability and neighborhood based programs. The purpose in launching these initiatives is simply to make the Syracuse Police Department better at preventing and responding to various crimes, working with victims, and bringing perpetrators to justice.

As a direct result of Chief Fowler's proficiency, he has been invited to speak and lecture at numerous events across the nation on a wide variety of law enforcement matters. In 2015 Chief Fowler participated in the National After-School Summit at the University of Southern California that included former Secretary of the Education Department, Rod Paige and former California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger.

All of Chief Fowler's experiences are accolades and are ultimately a reflection of his dedication to creating a safe environment for the children and families in Central New York while at the same time building trust & legitimacy within the Syracuse Police Department and also between the police and community.
