

Justin McCarthy

Senior Vice President
Patient & Health Impact
Pfizer

Justin McCarthy is Senior Vice President, Patient & Health Impact group, part of the Chief Business Office at Pfizer. Patient & Health Impact group brings together experts in health economics and outcomes research, real-world data and analytics, patient-centered outcomes assessment, market access, pricing, strategy and contracting, who generate evidence of the value of Pfizer medicines and vaccines and negotiate with governments and payers in the US and around the world to ensure access for patients. This group is also leading Pfizer's work to explore novel approaches to commercialize medicines through innovative partnerships and payment models.

Prior to this role, Justin was Senior Vice President, Global Policy & International Public Affairs, responsible for defining Pfizer's public policy positions on US healthcare at the federal and state level and advancing government and public affairs strategies internationally. Justin has been with Pfizer for 25 years and was formerly Chief Counsel for Pfizer's Worldwide Research and Development division, advising on regulatory, licensing and clinical trial issues, and overseeing global intellectual property activities. He has extensive experience negotiating Pfizer's research collaborations and partnerships with government, academic institutions and biotechnology companies.

Justin serves on the boards of the National Pharmaceutical Council, Vivli Inc. and sits on the Portfolio and Strategic Investment Committee (PSI) within Pfizer which is the company's governance body that oversees the R&D investments and strategy.

Prior to joining Pfizer, Justin was an associate in the law firm of Keller & Heckman. Justin holds a bachelor's degree in pharmacy from the University of Rhode Island and law degree from the Catholic University of America.