Current:

2016-2022	Medicare Physician Fee Schedule (PFS): Data Collection on Resources Used in Furnishing Global Services Center of Medicare and Medicaid Services/Contract Co-Principal Investigator ($3,950,626) The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) currently bundles payment for post-operative care within 10 or 90 days after most surgical procedures. Historically, CMS has not collected data on how many post-operative visits are actually performed in the surgical global periods and how this number compares with the number of visits considered during the valuation process. The Medicare Access and CHIP Reauthorization Act of 2015 mandated that CMS collect data on the number and level of post-operative visits to enable CMS to assess the accuracy of global surgical package valuation. Under this contract RAND will assess the accuracy of payment for surgical procedures with 10-or 90-day global periods and the impact of different revaluation methods.

- 2017-2021 Impact of Telemedicine on Medicare Beneficiaries with Mental Illness
National Institute Mental Health/Grant # 1R01MH112829-01A1
Principal Investigator ($2,785,781)
Access to mental health specialists is difficult for many patients in the U.S., particularly for the poor and those who live in rural communities. Telemental health is one potential solution for this access problem, and there has been rapid growth in the number of live video-based telemental health visits in the U.S. While there are numerous rigorous randomized-control trials comparing telemental health visits to in-person mental health specialist care, there have been little research on how telemental health is being used in real-world settings. The uptake of telemental health has been very uneven geographically, and what explains this variation is also largely unknown. Our mixed-methods proposal centers on filling these gaps in knowledge.
- 2019-2023 The Impact of Telestroke on Patterns of Care and Long-Term Outcomes
National Institute Neurological Diseases and Stroke/Grant # R01NS111952
Principal Investigator ($2,977,206)
In telestroke a stroke expert who is physically far away uses technology and videoconferencing to help evaluate the patient. Availability of telestroke in emergency departments and hospitals is increasing across the nation. The hope is that telestroke will increase rates of reperfusion, decrease disability and mortality, and lead to regionalization of stroke care - most patients receive care near their home while the critically ill are efficiently transferred to specialized centers. There is limited quantitative data on the impact of telestroke on these outcomes. In this mixed-methods study we use national data from approximately 50 million adults where we match stroke patients at 767 hospitals with telestroke to similar patients at similar hospitals without telestroke to quantify telestroke's larger impact on patterns of care (Aim 1) as well as reperfusion, mortality, and longer-term disability (Aim 2). We complement this with qualitative analyses on the impact of telestroke from the perspective of front-line providers and barriers and facilitators to effective use (Aim 3). The proposed study will be the largest and most comprehensive study on telestroke to date.
- 2019-2023 Telemedicine for Treatment of Opioid Use Disorder
National Institute on Drug Abuse/Grant # 1R01DA048533
Co-Principal Investigator (Huskamp Co-PI) ($2,959,535)
A key challenge in combating the opioid epidemic has been connecting individuals with opioid use disorder to evidence-based treatments. Telemedicine for substance use disorder (“teleSUD”) may be part of the solution. We have proposed a comprehensive national evaluation of telemedicine for opioid use disorder using data through 2021 from Medicaid, Medicare, and commercial insurance as well as a series of qualitative interviews. The proposed mixed-methods study will help providers interested in using tele-SUD and inform ongoing debates about regulations and reimbursement for tele-SUD in Congress and state legislatures. Our goal is to highlight policies and practices that drive greater use of tele-SUD and explore its potential role in improving access to, and quality of, care for individuals with opioid use disorder.
- 2020-2021 The Impact of COVID-19 Pandemic on Telemedicine Use and Outpatient Care
Commonwealth Fund
Principal Investigator ($116,137)
The use of telemedicine has suddenly become commonplace during the COVID-19 pandemic. Little is known on how telemedicine is being used during the pandemic across the population, which patients have been left behind due to the digital divide, and what needs to be done to facilitate the most effective forms of telemedicine. In several descriptive analyses, we seek to help inform this ongoing debate by describing variation in who is using telemedicine both from a patient and a provider perspective, which clinical conditions is it being used to treat, and what is driving variation in use across primary care practices.

2020-2022 Tiering Primary Care Providers Based on Price Indices
Health Care Service Corporation
Principal Investigator ($181,591)
Current price transparency initiatives encourage patients to save money by shopping for each individual service (e.g., lab test, dermatology visit). This is difficult for patients because they defer to their primary care physician on where to get care. The underlying premise of this project is that a more effective strategy to decrease prices and spending is to focus on a patient's choice of primary care physician. The choice of primary care physician largely dictates where patients get laboratory tests, imaging services, which specialists they see, and where they might be hospitalized. The project seeks to develop a methodology to profile the primary care physicians in each organization as lower cost using a price index and then describe the potential savings for patients and society.

Career stage: medical student at University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston
Mentoring role: student mentor
Accomplishments: published three first authored peer-reviewed manuscripts on colonoscopy quality. Awarded the Joseph B. Kass Award for a medical student who has demonstrated excellence in research during his or her medical school career

- 2015-2017 Sunita M. Desai, PhD / Assistant Professor, Department of Population Health, NYU Langone Medical School / Seidman Fellow in Health Care Policy, Harvard Medical School
Career stage: Seidman postdoctoral fellow
Mentoring role: fellow mentor
Accomplishments: Mentoring during fellowship with several peer-reviewed publications focused on price transparency.
- 2016-2018 Ghideon Ezaz, MD, MPP / Assistant Professor of Medicine, Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai / Liver Medicine, Mount Sinai Hospital
Career stage: Fellowship in Gastroenterology
Mentoring role: fellow mentor
Accomplishments: publication of several publications on colonoscopy quality including a first-authored manuscript on how physician personality is associated with quality.
- 2017-2020 Zhou Shi, BS / Medical Student, HST Program, Harvard Medical School
Career stage: Research Assistant, Department of Health Care Policy
Mentoring role: student mentor
Accomplishments: first authored peer-reviewed manuscript on quality of telemedicine visits and on antibiotic use in urgent care centers.
- 2017-2020 Andrew Wilcock, PhD / Assistant Professor of Family Medicine, University of Vermont Larner College of Medicine / Visiting Fellow, Blavatnik Institute of Health Care Policy, Harvard Medical School
Career stage: former Seidman postdoctoral fellow, Department of Health Care Policy, Harvard Medical School
Mentoring role: fellowship mentor
Accomplishments: mentoring during fellowship and junior faculty position has led to many publications including a first-authored NEJM article on the impact of bundled payments for joint replacement.
- 2017-2020 David Michael Levine, MD, MPH / Assistant Professor of Medicine, Harvard Medical School / General Internal Medicine, Brigham and Women's Hospital

NARRATIVE REPORT

As a clinician-investigator, I spend 80% of my time engaged in health policy research with the remainder providing care as a hospitalist as well as teaching both residents and medical students. My research primary focuses on two areas: (1) the impact of delivery innovations such as telemedicine on quality, access, and spending, (2) consumerism with a focus on price shopping for health care.

How patients receive medical care in the United States is changing--increasingly much of this care occurs outside the confines of an in-person visit with a physician. This change has rapidly accelerated during the COVID-19 pandemic. I have studied a wide range of delivery innovations including retail clinics, telephone-based care, personal health records, eConsults, eVisits, remote patient monitoring, and telemedicine. These innovations have great promise and I have quantified their impact on quality, access, and spending. In a completed R21 funded by the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, we compared the quality of retail clinics and physician practices. In a RO1 funded by the National Institutes of Mental Health, we are assessing the impact of telemental health on outcomes, in another R01 funded by the National Institute for Drug Abuse we are studying telemedicine for the treatment of substance use disorders, and in a third ongoing RO1 funded by the National Institutes of Neurological Diseases and Stroke, we are assessing the impact of telestroke on mortality and morbidity. I have studied a range of other telemedicine applications including for dermatology, lactation support, contraception, and treatment of low-acuity conditions. I've written a number of related articles as well as testified before the Congress and many state legislatures on how to improve telemedicine payment policy and regulations.

There is widespread interest in how consumerism and price transparency can be used to improve quality and decrease spending. Many purchasers are profiling physicians on their relative costs and using these cost profiles to help patient select a physician. Our research group examined the reliability and utility of such cost profiles. I am interested in using the burgeoning data in electronic health records for physician quality measurement. In a RO1 funded by the National Cancer Institute, we developed a natural language processing tool that takes free-text reports and identifies the key data to measure the colonoscopy quality of individual physicians. Through a RO1 funded by the National Institute of Aging, we pursued work on the impact of high deductible health plans on spending and price shopping. More recent work has evaluated the impact of price transparency initiatives, reference pricing models, and rewards programs.

I have conducted work in other areas including payment reform where I've studied the impact of pay-for-performance programs, Maryland's global budget program, and bundled payments. Recent work has also focused on how patients access care and the shift away from primary care.

In addition to my research, my clinical activities include caring for patients as a hospitalist at the Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center. In that role, I care for patients independently and serve as an attending on the teaching service supervising and teaching medical residents and medical students. Teaching is a key component of my career. For three years I led the health policy component of a first-year class for 170 first-year medical and dental school students at Harvard and for one year served as the overall course director for a one-month class which involves over 100 faculty from across the medical school. Finally, one of my passions is mentoring junior researchers from undergraduates to junior faculty. I have mentored nine junior faculty members, seven post-doctoral fellows, numerous residents and medical students, as well as serving on many PhD committees. I received the 2020 A. Clifford Barger Excellence in Mentoring Award.
