Doug Brake is a telecommunications policy analyst at the Information Technology and Innovation Foundation. He has written extensively about fixed and wireless broadband policy, open Internet regulation, and competition policy. He has particular interest in emerging broadband technologies, wireless enforcement, and spectrum-sharing mechanisms.

He previously served as a research assistant at the Silicon Flatirons Center at the University of Colorado, where he sought to improve policy surrounding spectrum enforcement, interference limits, and gigabit network deployment. Prior to that, he served as a Hatfield scholar at the Federal Communications Commission, assisting with the implementation of the advanced communications services section of the 21st Century Communications and Video Accessibility Act.

Brake holds a law degree from the University of Colorado Law School and a bachelor's degree in English literature and philosophy from Macalester College.
