

Chris Lewis is President and CEO of Public Knowledge where he is a leading voice for digital rights on behalf of the public interest. He's served as President and CEO since July 2019 after seven years as PK's Vice President, leading the organization's day-to-day advocacy and political strategy on Capitol Hill and at government agencies.

Before joining Public Knowledge, Chris worked in the Federal Communications Commission Office of Legislative Affairs, including as its Deputy Director. He is a former U.S. Senate staffer for the late Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and has over two decades of political organizing and advocacy experience, including serving as Virginia State Director at GenerationEngage, and working as the North Carolina Field Director for Barack Obama's 2008 Presidential Campaign and other roles throughout the campaign.

Chris graduated from Harvard University with a Bachelor's degree in Government in 2002 and lives in Alexandria, VA where he remains active on local issues, including being elected to two terms on the Alexandria City Public School Board (2013-2018).
