

Drew Garner is the director of policy engagement at the Benton Institute for Broadband & Society. As the leader of Benton's Broadband State Education Project, Garner works with federal agencies, state broadband offices, elected officials, internet service providers, and community stakeholders across the country to improve broadband access, adoption, and affordability. Previously, Garner served as the State Broadband Policy Advisor for Common Sense Media, and he received a Masters in Public Policy from the University of Minnesota and a Bachelor of Fine Arts from New York University.