PROFILE

Lindsay Slader is a specialist in regulatory compliance and government relations for internet gaming and geolocation technologies. Having worked in the internet gaming and digital services industries for nine years, Lindsay is an expert in her field, regularly speaking at industry conferences and as an expert witness at government hearings on topics pertaining to internet gaming regulation. She is also a routine contributor to various industry publications.

She maintains close relationships and possesses a strong network of iGaming connections with national and state gaming regulators, political representatives, US casino operators, technology platform providers, software suppliers, and tribal governments. Lindsay is currently Operations Manager for leading geolocation technology provider GeoComply, and provides other advisory services to gaming technology and management firms across multiple product channels and platforms on product implementation, integration, usability, compliance, and operations. Lindsay's experience also includes five years in specializing in regulatory compliance, gaming technology, and business development at gaming compliance testing companies Gaming Laboratories International and Technical Systems Testing. During that time she worked with some of the largest operators, vendors, and regulators in North America and abroad, and is well versed in iGaming operations and product offerings. Lindsay is especially well accomplished in delivering successful RFP procurement bids, which carry a significant amount of weight in acquiring new gaming business in North America.
