Attachment - Additional Questions for the Record

The Honorable Gregg Harper

1. Self-exclusion for problem gamers is an issue that has been raised in this context because of the serious amount of money at stake in daily fantasy sports. How is the self-exclusion principle implemented in the daily fantasy sports marketplace? Is there a central hub for all of the operators to exchange information securely?
2. Can you describe the different types of games available on your members' websites, particularly the different types of contests offered in the daily fantasy sports category. I've heard about head-to-head contests that could have entry fees as high as a thousand dollars. Would a player, who is signing onto a site for the first time, have any idea if they were playing in a head-to-head contest with a highly skilled player or "shark"?
