Firm Profile

Greenwood Environmental Counsel is a law firm established by Mark Greenwood to provide advice and assistance to clients in the implementation of environmental strategy. The firm's focus is on governmental policies regarding health and environmental protection that affect the development, manufacture, distribution and use of products in commerce.

Mark's assistance to clients draws on his extensive experience at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, where he served in senior legal and policy positions, as well as many years in private practice advising global companies and non-profit institutions.

During his 16-year career at EPA, Mark served as Associate General Counsel for Pesticides and Toxic Substances, Assistant General Counsel for Superfund and Assistant General Counsel for RCRA. From 1990-1994, Mark was the Director of EPA's Office of Pollution Prevention and Toxics, overseeing the Agency's programs and initiatives affecting commercial products. He directed regulatory policy under the Toxic Substances Control Act and the Emergency Planning and Community Right to Know Act. These responsibilities included oversight of new chemical substances, regulation of significant existing chemicals (e.g., asbestos, lead, PCB's), and implementation of the Toxic Release Inventory.

Mark also guided EPA policy on a wide range of pollution prevention and right-to-know initiatives, including the Agency's Design for Environment and Green Chemistry programs, as well as Federal policy on "green" marketing claims, eco-labeling and procurement of environmentally preferable products. He also exercised a leadership role in EPA international activities (e.g., heading the U.S. delegation to the OECD Chemicals Program.)

Mark has been in private practice since 1994. He has provided advice on health and environmental matters to companies in the financial, chemical, energy, aerospace, electronics, heavy manufacturing, consumer products, automobile, pharmaceutical, waste management, entertainment, mining and agricultural sectors. In addition, he has provided assistance to educational and health care institutions. He has served a variety of global clients in North America, Asia and Europe.

Mark is a graduate of the University of Michigan, where he received Bachelor of Arts, Masters of Public Policy and Juris Doctor degrees.
